Here and There

Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN

WE should appeal promptly to state and federal authorities to stop the political deal by which Pike and Nevada counties apparently mean to cut our city off from the proposed river-crossing to Delight.

Governor Futrell Hears Big Benton Plant Will Be Completed

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Governor Futrell was informed Tuesday that the Public Works Administration would grant a $1,765,000 loan to the state hospital at Benton if the State Construction Commission could make arrangements for handling the transaction through the local banks.

One proposal, which the governor indicated met his approval, was that the Public Works Administration would agree to purchase the construction bonds next year to reimburse the local banks and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for money advanced for the hospital's construction.

Money to Be Advanced

FORT SMITH, Ark.—Judge Joseph M. Hill, chairman of the state Construction Commission, said Monday upon his return from Washington, D. C., that the Public Works Administration was expected to loan $1,765,000 for completion of the State Hospital at Benton.

Judge Hill said he had advised Governor Futrell of the decision of the PWA officials.

Judge Hill went to Washington after state officials had worked several months to obtain a loan to complete the new State Hospital. Several buildings practically have been completed at the new site for about two years, but remain unoccupied because of lack of heating facilities.

Numerous obstacles were raised to prevent completion of the loan and it was believed that a legislative session might be necessary. However, Governor Futrell did not share this belief and Judge Hill went to Washington to attempt to solve the difficulties.

Rehabilitation for Rural Areas—Succeeds CWA on April 1

LITTLE ROCK.—With the Civil Works Administration in the last week of its being, Arkansas officials of this organization and the Emergency Relief Commission are marking time while W. R. Dyess, state relief administrator, is in Washington to confer on the new program that will supersede the CWA.

Mr. Dyess left Saturday night and was accompanied by Judge Charles Mitchell, county judge of Polk county and Herbert Bessler, Mayor of Jonesboro. The latter two will seek liberalization of contemplated relief measures.

Before leaving, Mr. Dyess addressed a letter to all mayors and county judges in the state calling their attention to the fact that all direct relief will end in the state April 1 and pointing out that the relief administration will expect communities to care for their own indigents. The relief administration is prepared however, he said, to furnish administrative personnel to those communities who can furnish tax funds for relief purposes but who can not bear the administrative cost.

Mr. Dyess carried with him tentative plans for the rural rehabilitation and work programs that will be inaugurated April 1. These he will submit to Harry L. Hopkins, national administrator for approval. Definite announcement of the two plans is expected to be made by Mr. Dyess upon his return and Monday, April 2, will find Arkansas plunged into an entirely new relief program.

The rehabilitation program will apply only in the rural areas and the work program will be carried on in towns of 5,000 and over. All advances of money or seed and stock for the farmer program will be in the nature of a loan and the relief administration will expect repayment in some form. The work division will furnish only the labor for future projects and communities will be expected to furnish all materials.

ATTACK IN SOUTH

Bailey, North Carolina, Joins Borah in Denouncing "Socialism"

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The senate Tuesday adopted an amendment to the Bankhead compulsory cotton control bill raising the tax to be applied against all cotton produced in excess of specified quotas from 50 to 75 per cent of the market value.

Bill Is Attacked

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The Bankhead cotton bill was denounced in the senate Monday by one of the South's own senators—Bailey, Democrat, North Carolina—as a "slavery bill" that offered a choice between "a free republic and a regimented Socialism or Communism."

Administration leaders conceded the vote on the bill would be close, after another day of debate which saw Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho, challenge its constitutionality and Chairman Smith of the agriculture committee compare it to the war-time draft act, as a necessity to cash "slackers."

Bailey used plain language in opposing the bill.

"It should pass and be upheld by the supreme court," he said. "I would know the end of all things had come in America and I shall prepare for the Socialistic regime and the dictatorship."

"America needs more education in human liberty now than all the prosperity that God might pour out. The Fourth of July long ago lost its significance. You have got to preserve liberty to save the union."

Smith asked the senate to "strain the constitution" if necessary to provide the relief that "85 per cent of the cotton farmers believe is essential to their salvation."

Lewis for President

The senate's two senior members tangled over the compulsory cotton control measure after Senator Lewis, Democrat, Idaho, speaking for the bill, urged the senate to support President Roosevelt, right or wrong.

"The president has the right to be wrong," Lewis said, demanding support of the chief executive as a demonstration to the world that congress was "for him."

Borah warned that to prohibit a legitimate article of commerce from moving in interstate trade by taxes would "take away the very foundation of the government, itself."

"We are using the taxing power to prejudice a citizen of the United States from enjoying the right to sell his property in the ordinary course of trade," he added. "Is that a tax or is it a fine?"

The Idaho senator said he was concerned because if the bill passed it would be extended to wheat, cattle, and all other farm products. He contended that the purpose of the bill was to punish the small minority of farmers who were not willing to sign the voluntary acreage reduction agreements and to coerce them.

"I admit frankly that is what I'm driving at," Smith retorted. "I am anxious to bring the sucker in. Let's get him in. I say let's coerce him in."

Smith said the bill was aimed at (Continued on Page Three)

FUSIONISTS REVOLT

Democratic City Administration Denounced as "Little Tammany"

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—(AP)—One killing, numerous sluggings and other disorders marked the hotly-contested municipal election here Tuesday between the powerful Democratic organization and the citizens' Fusionist ticket.

William Findley, negro Democratic election worker, was shot and killed in a polling place by a bullet apparently intended for a Republican election judge.

Justin Bowersock, 32, reporter on the Kansas City Star, was slugged in the head and six or eight shots were fired at him and two citizens' Fusion workers near a polling place.

The Fusionists are attempting to oust the Democratic municipal machine.

Reed for Machine

KANSAS CITY.—(AP)—Two political organizations, each claiming to represent a "new deal," were ready for a battle to the finish at Kansas City polling places Tuesday, seeking municipal control.

The "new" call themselves Democrats and acknowledge the leadership of T. J. (Boss) Pendergast, who says this boss business is just a matter of making friends. This faction, organized to the last precinct, expresses confidence in its ability to deliver the lion's share of the 245,000 registered voters. It has used the campaign "crp" that a vote against Kansas City Democracy threatens the Missouri support of President Roosevelt and his New Deal.

The opposition group is nonpartisan. It is known as the Fusion party. It calls the Pendergast cohorts a "Little Tammany" and asks for a new deal locally, pledging to reduce the cost of government, appointment of city employees on a merit basis, graftless contracts awarded on competitive bids, a cleaned-up Police Department and a city government based on a charter intended to guarantee a nonpolitical administration.

Opposing candidates for mayor are A. Ross Hill, former president of the University of Missouri, Fusionist, and Bryce B. Smith, wealthy banking company executive, the Democratic incumbent.

The campaign has been one of the most bitter in the city's history. Ex-Senator James A. Reed took the stump on behalf of the Democrats to brand the Fusion party as an old boss-ridden and corrupt Republican machine returning in disguise. City Manager H. F. McElroy joined in the campaign for the Democrats.

The Fusionists applauded a statement by Ewing Y. Mitchell, assistant secretary of commerce, who denounced the Kansas City machine as unpalatable to national Democrats.

Outcome Hangs in Balance as Vote Nears in Senate

Roosevelt Sweeping Clear His Desk for Fishing Jaunt in South

TO LEAVE TUESDAY

Private Air Lines to Regain Mail Immediately for Temporary Service

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The house at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon overrode President Roosevelt's veto of the veterans' allowances bill.

The exact vote could not be immediately learned by newspaper men in the lower chamber.

The bill now goes to the senate, where the vote to override the presidential veto is uncertain.

Administration leaders had previously said there was little chance for the house to override, despite the overwhelming majority by which the bill was originally passed.

To Restore Airmail

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—President Roosevelt intends to permit immediate bidding by private lines for airmail service and to turn the airmail transportation over to them as soon as possible.

He called in officials of the Post-office Department Tuesday to arrange for bids to serve during the temporary period before permanent legislation is enacted.

The president packed action into every hour Tuesday in order to clear his desk for his departure Tuesday night on a fishing cruise in Southern waters.

His schedule called first for the signing of the naval construction bill authorizing an American navy as large as treaties will permit.

His veto message to congress on the veterans' allowances bill was planned Tuesday afternoon.

The president listened to railway labor representatives in an effort to adjust the wage dispute and held his last meeting during the afternoon with the National Executive Council.

Votes Veterans' Bill

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—President Roosevelt Monday night wrote a veto message for the independent offices supply bill, carrying the disputed veterans benefit amendment. It will be transmitted to congress Tuesday.

The president was known to believe that the veterans benefit legislation, amounting to approximately $85,000,000, would jeopardize the budget.

His position on the restoration of the federal pay cut, costing considerably more than $100,000,000 was not immediately known. The bill with these two amendments was given final Congressional approval this afternoon.

Mr. Roosevelt was believed ready also to tell the limit to which he will go in liberalization of the veterans' economy bill passed a year ago. Because he is leaving Tuesday night on a long-deferred fishing trip, it is expected Mr. Roosevelt will seek action on his veto message Tuesday.

Bill Finally Approved

Congress earlier Monday had approved the house program, restoring about $242,000,000 to war veterans and federal employees as against $333,000,000 voted by the senate.

Acting first, the senate accepted the less liberal house provisions on pay by 59 to 19 and then concurred in the smaller house veteran's appropriation.

Prodigal Son, Topic in Sermon Series

Rev. E. C. Rule to Speak Tuesday Night on "The Far Country"

Beginning a series of sermons on the parable of the prodigal son as given in the gospel of Luke, the pastor of First Methodist church, Monday night spoke on "Healed the Wrong Way." In the beginning he quoted Matthew 16:25, "whoever would save his life shall lose it."

The Rev. E. C. Rule said: "This young man, like most of us, starts out with the wrong principle of life. He says, 'Give me,' and that is where he laid the foundation of his ruin. For he was making himself the center of his life. And all experience teaches us that a self-centered life is headed down."

Again he said in discussing the central purpose in life: "There can only be one center in life. This young man could make self the center. Or he could make God the center. He did not have to take the one he chose."

Local Guardsmen Score on Annual Armory Inspection

Company "A," Hope National Guard, took first place among 20 Arkansas guard units in the annual armory inspection just completed. It was learned here Tuesday in a letter received from Colonel Heber L. McAlister of the 153rd infantry.

Hope was given first place on the basis of records armory, store room, leadership, drill, specialist, attendance and appearance. During the past year the local unit advanced from eleventh place in the standings to head the list.

The letter received here was addressed to Captain John M. Duffie of the Hope unit. It said:

"I am writing to congratulate you and your company on the splendid showing made on the annual armory inspection which has just been completed. The records filed with me in the office show that Company 'A' heads the list with a percentage of 94."

Witch Doctors Cast Their Spell Over Harlem

BY PAUL HARRISON

NEW YORK.—Black Harlem is almost as racially conglomerate as the rest of Gotham.

For here are Negro people from all over the earth, Mohammedans from the East, Buddhists even, from islands near the Orient, Christians from ancient Abyssinia, Nubians, Senegambians, folk whose forebears knew Stanley, East and West Indians, castles from South America.

Thousands speak French; others Portuguese and Spanish. Some newspapers print columns of items from Jamaica, Trinidad, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Barbados. Societies have been formed to promote inter-racial amity, but the strongest integrating force is the feeling of superiority of the American negro and the foreigners' envy of him.

In the night clubs of the dusky "Latin quarter" around One Hundred and Tenth streets they're singing "De Got Harlem on Mon Mind," "Vicux Homme River" and "Underneath de Harlem Lane."

All races show a willingness to stake money on the turn of the dice or the flip of a card. And in well-guarded basements reached by labyrinthine passages, all manner of dusky sportsmen gather each night for the breathless, gloomy excitement of cock-fighting.

Food and Drink

Food and drink are unifying factors, too. They say it doesn't take a Jamaica boy any time at all to acquire a taste for corn whiskey. And there are few Central American and West Indian restaurants any more, each with its native cook and special menu. Foreigners are learning to like the fried chicken and corn pone, and even the watermelon and the succulent "possum. Old folks, though, still like yucca, which look like tulip bulbs, and papayas, which resemble a gourd, taste a little like cucumbers, and are eaten raw, fried or boiled.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

Pants Gone, Shirt Gone, so "Chip" Is Near Surrender. Senator Nye Gets His Rating—Mongrel. Two Fists on Bench in Auto Crisis Parley.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON.—"Somebody got my pants and somebody got my shirt," commented Assistant Secretary of the Treasury L. W. "Chip" Robert. "As soon as they get by underwear, I'm going back to Georgia."

That marked the first sign of weakening on the part of either contestant in the unofficial but no end exciting battle here for the title of the Democratic party's most successful man-about-town.

The other contestant is Ray Baker, handsome, white-haired director of the anti-trust in the Wilson administration.

Everyone likes Ray Baker, but everyone also likes Chip. So when it became a local game to count up which one you'd see oftener at places of entertainment and amusement, private or public, friendly interest became intense. Mr. Baker soon edged ahead, however, because:

1. He had a long head start and had been playing with the Democrats for so many years. 2. He had no job to distract his attention, whereas "Chip," though he crashed through Washington society in spectacular fashion, still tried to be conscientious about his.

"Chip" began to crack when Secretary Morgenthau deprived him of control of the Treasury's federal building division. It was after Roosevelt ordered him off the PWA executive board, however, that things began to seem serious. (Pants and shirt!) Secretary Ickes must have been responsible for that. He thinks "Chip" is too friendly with power interests, especially since Robert opposed PWA loans for municipal power projects. The fact is, though that "Chip" was friendly to everybody. He may not have been a high-grade government executive, but everyone agrees he's a nice fellow.

If he departs and gives Ray Baker the undisputed championship, there'll be many to remember "Chip" Robert and his parties for a long, long time. Nye Learns He's Mongrel. A senate sub-committee was conferring privately on an appointment confirmation and Senator Nye, annoyed by evidence of peanut politics, said he'd like to know how to label men as Republicans or Democrats or something else.

"Roosevelt had a majority in North Dakota of 105,000, while I, running on the ticket as Hoover, had one of 107,000," he said. "What does that make me?"

"That makes you a mongrel, growled partisan Senator Stephens of Mississippi."

Just Roaming Around. Noticed here and there: National Labor Board, meeting on the automobile case—Two priests on the bench. Stout, spectacled, bald Father Frederick Sidenburg of the Detroit regional board and Father Francis J. Haas, rugged, curly-haired NLB member. . . .

Newton D. Baker at the hearing, but insisting he just has returned from a Mediterranean trip, merely was looking around, and wasn't representing anybody.

Senate: Grim, white-haired Fess, demanding that McKellar yield him the floor because the latter had mentioned his name in an airmail speech. "He must yield!" insisted Fess.

McKellar, angry and with face contorted, replied, "If that's the senator's attitude, he might as well sit down, because I'm going right on."

Fess became exaggeratedly deferential. Would the senator "please" yield? The senator did.

House: Edith Rogers, with a purple dress and a little red rose. Florence Kahn, white hair askew, with black dress and pink rose. Mrs. Clarke, in plain black and a white bracelet. Isabella Greenway, in her usual flash of colors—featuring brown, reds, and oranges. Congressman Sirovich, with a huge red carnation.

Mrs. Rogers was attacking Roosevelt, alleging inhumanities to veterans resulting from the economy act. Rankin of Mississippi started yelling at her and she wouldn't yield.

But Rankins kept on yelling. He insisted that she had voted for a measure cutting veterans. She denied it. But Rankin kept on insisting, disqualifying himself as a perfect gentleman.

And then there was Mrs. Kahn's off-the-floor remark as to her bonus vote: I'd rather be a live cat than a dead lion." (Copyright, 1934, NEA Service, Inc.)

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Parents Should Encourage Child's Interests—Hobbies May Be Successfully Turned to Educational Advantage.

How a child's interests can be turned to good account is explained by Olive Roberts Barton in this article in her Child Training series.

Interest is pure magic.

At last the basic truth of real learning and development has been discovered—and schools, recognizing what they should have done years ago, are now building their systems around it. But children learn as much outside of school as in, and a great deal more when we think of it. Most of their realistic experience is obtained away from a desk. Jimmy learns from his environment, from the people around him and from his contacts with people more than he will from a book. What these things are depends largely upon us. Happy is the child who lives in friendly family group and whose friends are right for him. This I shall speak on later.

But the thing that will intrigue him most is what he is doing himself. And he will do what interests him at the time.

Child's New Horizons.

During infancy and the early years his interests lay in those things that developed body, co-ordination, and certain mind processes. Ego was the word.

Now at six and in the years following he will be more concerned with the world. Not unselfishly of course, for we never lose that, but his eyes will be turned out rather than in.

He will not only continue to experiment, gratify impulse and be intensely active and curious, but do so with redoubled energy.

The pity is that when he's all set to go, we seem to set our faces against it. We cram his time with the things he doesn't like to do and nullify the things he wants to do.

Of course this is necessary to a certain degree, but not to the extremes we have taken it.

We have naturally gravitated to the opinion that most things the child wants to do should not be allowed, and we've used a forcing process of dull substitution. We think we can substitute lessons, clean ears, errands, and so on and keep him happy.

All these things have their places but they will be accepted naturally and contentedly if his life is balanced nicely on the other side by things which lie nearest his heart. His own real interests.

A child's free time, and he should have plenty, should not be empty or aimless.

He now has preferences. He cannot pick up two pie pans and and bank them together as he did as a baby and feel occupied, or trundle up and down on a velocipede and feel any deep satisfaction for days on end. He might do both but neither will fill the soul yearning to be "doing" for very long.

Encourage Constructiveness. To build, to create, to discover, to put himself into something real and definite should not only be allowed but encouraged. The psychology of the mud pie explains itself, or the little ship he puts together, or the bird he colors.

In this vehicle of interest lies the parent's opportunity. In every mud pie, or lets make it a "dobe" house, or a wigwam like a hundred stories of Indians and how they lived. In a ship there are still more stories. In a bird whole volumes.

The points are merely illustrations of how this interest may be turned to educational advantage. But please do not think that everything he does must have education tacked to it.

He should be provided with many things to do, things that interest him deeply. That comes first. Second, the interests he seeks himself, if they come within the law and he must try to grow new eyes here) need our sympathy and co-operation. And third, we can turn his interest to good account and through them reach him and guide him and train him.

It is the idle child who gets into trouble a dozen times a day, not the happily busy one. "Don't" will not wear thin from usage if we cultivate the interest habit and then fill it.

NEXT: A child should have faith in children.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

PABLITO, a handsome youth, becomes a fugitive when, due to circumstances beyond his control, he finds himself on his way to Cuba with BEAU and LOTTE.

Beau has killed a man and stolen a famous string of pearls. Pablito does not know this or that he himself has been accused of the crime which took place at the Florida home of wealthy JIM FIELD.

Pablito loves Field's daughter, ESTELLE, and she loves him. MARGIE TRIGADWAY knows Pablito is innocent but fears scandal if she tells this. She goes to Havana, hoping to find Pablito there.

In Havana Pablito tries to find NORMAN NOYES who befriended him as a child but his efforts fail. Beau, impressed by Pablito's natural ability as a boxer, decides to arrange some matches for him.

Meanwhile SIR AUBREY, a gifted Englishman and Pablito's father, begins a search for his son.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXIII

WITHIN a month Marcia Treadway boarded a boat for New York, having found Rio "rather stupid." Back in New York, she took up residence in the brown stone house that had been left her by an aunt—the same aunt who had left Marcia a legacy so large that it was bawled in newspaper headlines.

Usually when she returned home Marcia decided fretfully that she must have the place "redone" and usually some young decorator whose company she found, for a time, amusing got the commission.

But on this home-coming Marcia had no such interests. Her friends murmured that she was not looking well and this stirred up the old story about Ted Jeffries. That affair, said some of her supposed friends, had "gone pretty far."

Marcia knew what was being said and who was saying it but this knowledge did not matter as once it would have. The two things that mattered were her feeling of guilt, which was increasing instead of diminishing, and her fear for Pablito's safety.

She began to draw toward a young attorney who, with sundry other men, had for a long while added to her arrogance by a velled courtship of her fortune. And while she was with him she sounded him out about the treatment of criminals and about whether they always had fair trials.

One unusually cool May night they sat before a fire in the drawing room of Marcia's home. She said, leaning forward, "Tell me, Tony—even if everyone thought a man guilty they wouldn't execute him immediately, would they?"

"That depends," he answered. "Law is, to some extent, a matter of geography. There are places where men take the law into their own hands. Sometimes we have lynchings, you know."

She grew pale and shrank back in her chair, her hands tightly gripping the arms.

Then she managed to hide her perturbation. "What would you do," she asked, "if you knew a man to be innocent but could not tell how or why you know it?"

"I'd forget about it," he answered casually.

Marcia gave a short, mirthless laugh. It sounded so easy but she knew it was far from easy.

"Tony," she said then, with a change of tone, "that reminds me of something else I wanted to ask you about. I want to locate a boy of 18—or perhaps a year or two older—and I don't know how to go about it. I want to keep the matter secret."

Tony thought of Marcia's brother who had died in an asylum to which, by the most vicious forms of vice, he had paid his grim entrance fee.

"You knew Lester was married?" she asked on sudden inspiration. She could pretend Pablito was Lester's son! Where Lester's wife was, she did not know, but she assumed she could silence her on the subject if she had to.

"Do you know what country the boy is liable to be in?"

"Cuba or South America. I rather think South America."

"Well," he said, "if you took the matter to the police—"

"But I don't want to do that," she interrupted. "You see my nephew—charming, isn't it?"

She was caught, and sent to a reformatory. He escaped. Now I want to find him and give him another chance."

"Ah—I see. Well, detectives—" "I suppose so," she agreed, not quite happily. "But, with his reformatory record, is that safe? Wouldn't the detectives be working with the police?"

"Not if your case makes them keep away from the police. With sufficient money, Marcia, almost anything is possible."

"I have always thought so, but lately—"

She fell into a reverie then and thought of Pablito, the boy whose eyes had been "enchanted" her. If she could only find him he would be utterly dependent on her. She was obsessed by this thought and of making him into a man of the world. She would be very good to him; very, very good to him!

"I've spoken to you twice," said Tony.

"Oh, really?" she murmured with a lift of fine arched brows and a return to her old, languid insolence.

THE priest who had given the shelter of his humble home to Norman Noyes salvaged enough pennies from his poor box to send Noyes to Key West. "You are running into the jaws of death, my friend," he warned.

Noyes nodded, abstractedly. "I think," he said, "Pablito may have returned to our island."

"That is possible," the priest agreed.

"I must find him."

Noyes nodded, abstractedly. "Let me know how things go with you," the priest petitioned. "And," he added, "you have my prayers."

So Noyes started for Key West. On the boat on which he traveled Noyes noticed an Englishman whose monacle kept popping from his eye to dangle on his waistcoat. With him was a man who appeared to be an American.

They sat, throughout the entire day, talking eagerly or sunk into a silence that was preoccupied.

As Noyes studied the two men Sir Aubrey was saying to his companion, "First of all, of course, we must find this Angela."

The man whom he called Billings agreed. "That will be easy enough," he promised.

Sir Aubrey drew a sigh of relief. He began to think of introducing Pablito at Lower Gittings. The boy's resemblance to the family might be marked. Sir Aubrey longed to consult with Billings about this, because the fact might cause some difficulty. Ah, if he could only arrange to introduce the boy as his son—the son he had always wanted—without hurting anyone! Perhaps, in time, a way would be found.

He opened his mouth to speak, then thought better of it and fumbled for his monacle which had dropped to dangle on his tan, double-breasted waistcoat.

It was the next day that they found Angela sunning herself on the church steps. She heard their errand through an interpreter and for a few moments was silent. Then she agreed, with a gasp, that she had the boy and that he was a son to her.

At the moment, however, he was absent. He was working elsewhere; she did not know exactly where. She rose painfully and stiffly from the steps, repeating her story with many unnecessary words and unnecessary gestures.

"She's lying," said Billings as he watched her narrowly. "Either she wants to hide the boy from us or she doesn't know where he is. I'm going to find out about this!"

A few hours later Billings did find out about it. He learned from a woman who had been Angela's neighbor, but not her friend, that Angela had abused the boy frightfully and that years before he had run away. God in his mercy alone knew where!

It was said that the boy had been seen upon one of the Keys in company with a man who drank at Bantam's.

"Bantam's?" Angela's former neighbor repeated. Alas, Bantam had gone to his rest or—as some said—his punishment. He had not been too good but then, the old crone added bitterly, who was?

It was not Christian to speak ill of the dead nor was it lucky. Piously she crossed herself.

"It will take some work to track this down," Billings admitted to Sir Aubrey as they sat in a hotel lounge that was airless and hot. "It can't all be done in a day," he added as he flicked the ashes from his cigar. He frowned as he spoke.

"Doubtless not," Sir Aubrey agreed.

"I'll have to find the name of the man who unofficially adopted the boy and where he is, it's still alive. However," Billings' tone became brisk, "we still have hope!"

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

Good Posture Secret of Gracious Bearing.

A famous authority on personality said recently that a gracious bearing is one of the greatest attributes to charm. Since charm and beauty are so closely related, let's consider this gracious bearing business.

Charming people who know how to enter a room without thinking of how they look or of what sort of impression they'll create have, generally speaking, pretty nearly perfect posture. When you see a round-shouldered girl dragging herself across a room and finally slumping into a chair, you're not likely to say to yourself, "That girl has charm." Your impression isn't pleasant, no matter how smooth her skin, or how shining her hair may be. On the other hand, a girl who isn't pretty at all—just average skin and hair—but who carries herself like a queen can't help but impress you favorably. Besides, a perfect posture stamps you as a positive individual.

Take, for instance, Queen Elizabeth—a homely woman, indeed, but one who had learned to stand up straight with chest high, chin up with the result that she was able to dominate an entire kingdom long after youthful beauty and health had fled. And so it is with modern women. The beauty of youth flees, but a gracious bearing, a direct result of correct posture, does not.

Who measures man beside a hill
Will find that he is humble still.
Tall pines against a northern sky
Have wisdom we could profit by.
The grave sweet songs the hill brooks
sing
Have themes they learned from every spring.
There is a reason why the thrush
Prefers for song the twilight's hush.
Let me be humble, then, before
The high hills' truth, the hill brooks'

And at the twilight's ending pray
With thrushes for the vanished day.
Let me remember seed and son.

EASTER CUSTOMS

around the World

In Nice, France, provincials in native costumes hold gay folk dances in the streets at Easter time. Natives of southern France mingle with visitors from foreign lands to make this flower festival a period of singular beauty. One of the most colorful events of the fête is the procession in which many girls from the provinces, dressed in quaint garb, take part.

NEXT: Mexicans burn effigies of Judas.

Secretary Wallace on the cotton situation, because Wallace frankly admitted he knew "nothing about it."
Bailey said the bill would mean a government "tyranny."

"If a farmer produces one bale more than the secretary of agriculture says he can, he pays a penalty of 50 per cent of the market value," he said. "If the federal government can do that we can do anything and we do not have a government; we have a tyranny."

"If we can do that we haven't a vestige of state's rights left. It's the first legislation I've seen that takes away from the people the rights the constitution said were inalienable."
"I think we have come to a breaking point. It's going to be a free republic or it's going to be regimented Socialism or Communism."

choose. And so does every other living being have to make choice."
In speaking of the place of one's ideals in making life the pastor stated:

"It is not always what we accomplish that makes life's quality good or bad. It is rather the purpose, the motive that governs us, which gives worth to our living. Godliness is a purpose to do His will. Real, upright character, high conduct are products of his purpose. A great life rests on loyal adherence to great ideals. Many a life is ruined because it's aims are too low."

"Our local newspaper, The Star, not so long ago gave an illustration of this. It said that in running the lines for a certain western railway a young engineer thought he sighted by a black hill in the distance. He was mistaken.
The supposed hill was buffalo. And the line today is crooked because of the error the young man made in his aim."

Tuesday night the series will be continued with a sermon on "The Far Country." The service will begin at 7:30 o'clock. The choir will sing as a special number, "The Ninety and Nine," made immortal by Sankey in his revival campaigns with Mr.
Moody. Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock the subject will be "The Church at Prayer."

Charges Against Sheriff Dropped

Comptroller, Att'y. Gen'l. Deny They Recommended Dismissal

MURFREESBORO, Ark.—Embezzelement indictments against M. D. Cummings, growing out of a $15,000 shortage in his accounts as sheriff and collector of Pike county, were dismissed here Monday by Circuit Judge A. P.
Steel upon the recommendation of Prosecuting Attorney J. M. Jackson, who told the court he had been advised to take such action by the attorney general, the state comptroller's office and by Cummings' bondsmen.

This statement brought denials from Little Rock Monday night from Griffin Smith, comptroller, and Kal L.
Norwood, attorney general. Mr. Smith telephoned Judge Steele indignantly denying that he or any member of his staff had made such a recommendation.
Attorney General Norwood was quoted in a similar denial.

Cummings, following dismissal of the half dozen indictments for embezzelement from the state and the county, was reinstated in office, but resigned as collector in favor of C. G. Bolin, who had served as temporary sheriff and collector since Cummings' indictment.

Judge Steele Monday also denied a claim by L. L. Cronkite, Little Rock attorney, for a fee originally presented in the sum of $1,500 as special attorney in the civil suit filed on behalf of the state, despite a letter from Attorney General Norwood, who appointed Cronkite, holding that the attorney was entitled to a fee.

Two civil suits were dismissed by Judge Steele after the National Surety Corporation agreed to pay $13,377.37 in full payment of the claims of the state, county, city and school district whose accounts were short.

A similar claim by John Owens of Murfreesboro, who was special counsel in the county's civil suit, was waived by him.
